

AFFECTATIONIST

Meaning: Affectationist: a person who adopts exaggerated or insincere behaviors or mannerisms to create a false impression of sophistication or refinement.

1. The affectationist's mannerisms were so exaggerated that they overshadowed their genuine personality.
2. In her pursuit of sophistication, she became an affectationist, adopting habits that felt inauthentic.
3. His speech was filled with the kind of pretentious jargon typical of an affectationist.
4. The affectationist struggled to connect with others as their behavior seemed forced and unnatural.
5. Critics described the author as an affectationist, noting how his style often felt contrived.
6. At the gallery, the affectationist attempted to impress by overly analyzing every piece of art.
7. Her affectationist tendencies made it difficult for her friends to take her seriously.
8. The affectationist's obsession with style over substance left many feeling alienated.
9. Despite his efforts to appear cultured, he was often labeled an affectationist by his peers.
10. In conversations, the affectationist would drop obscure references to impress rather than engage.

Source: sentences.whatistheurl.com

<https://sentences.whatistheurl.com/sentence/affectationist>